

Snapshots to SUCCESS

Beaming

As a classroom teacher, it makes me so happy to see my students enthusiastic about making progress. Being that each student is unique and progresses at a different rate, when I check their individual status and see growth beyond my expectations it makes me so proud.

When children share with me that they have advanced to a higher level, their faces beam. Like a video game, the success validates them and gives them the confidence to keep working hard. They are competing against themselves, so they don't have to be concerned about keeping up with another classmate.

Some of the children who struggled the most are smiling more, standing straighter, and incorporating more detail into their writing. The success they are experiencing makes them happy and most of all helps them believe in themselves—PRICELESS!

Teacher

New York

